

5 January 2021

Dear Student and Parent

The Prime Minister, Boris Johnson, announced a third national lockdown on Monday 4 January which has now taken effect. In accordance with the national lockdown restrictions our campuses will close for the majority of students and learning will move online.

Further Education / College Students

For most students learning will continue online until at least mid-February. Your teachers will contact you to schedule lessons accordingly, revise timetables if necessary and set work using Google Classroom – these contingency plans are already in place and we are ready to switch to remote learning quickly.

External Examinations

The government has announced that GCSE and A Level exams will now not take place. Awarding bodies, colleges and schools will work together and revise assessment arrangements in the coming weeks. It is important that all students should continue to engage in learning; this will help inform any process involving teacher calculated grades and because it will help prepare you for your next step.

Despite extensive lobbying since the lockdown announcement the government has yet to make a firm decision about vocational and technical exams scheduled throughout January. At this time, we will continue to facilitate January examinations and ensure these are conducted as safely as possible following our risk assessment. This is a very difficult situation and we do not wish to take opportunities away from students. However, for those students and parents who are worried and do not wish to attend their exam we will work with awarding bodies on alternative assessment methods in the coming weeks. For now the Department for Education are stating that January examinations should take place and therefore we will offer these to our students.

If you have been identified by your GP as being Clinically Extremely Vulnerable, then you should not attend college and alternative arrangements for your exams will be made.
